

The Magic
By Hazel Hagler

Once upon a time there was a magical land named The Magic where unicorns, fairies, and a princess lived. One day there was a problem! The problem was that everybody had been using too much magic! A curious, yellow haired unicorn named Beatrice could tell that the magic was fading because the flowers in the land were turning into weeds and blowing away in the wind. Beatrice figures it out by watching the other creatures. She sees another unicorn making a glass of water and can see they are using a lot of magic when they could use just a little bit. Then she sees a fairy using magic to draw a picture! Everybody is using too much magic!

Beatrice told her fairy friend, Morning Gaze, and Morning Gaze quickly zoomed over to Princess Ava to let her know that everyone was using too much magic. Princess Ava rings a special bell to let everybody know that they solved the problem! They need to use less magic to get what they need. Everybody starts using less magic and the flowers grow back! Beatrice feels proud! They all live happily ever after.
